“Echoes in the Blue”

In the vastness of a pure blue sky,
Where clouds drift like fleeting thoughts,
The air feels light, untouched,
Each breeze a quiet reminder of simplicity.

Migratory birds trace invisible paths,
Guided by an instinct older than time,
Their wings cutting through the clean air, Carrying with them the rhythm of distant lands.

THE BIRDS

inspired by The Birds, made from orange wool twill, it features a swarm of swallows screen printed by Simon Ungless and Andrew Groves and brought to life in the animation. Individual birds gradually materialize from the ominous black cloud of swallows at the exaggerated shoulders, swooping around the body of the jacket and increasing in size but decreasing in number toward the hem.

Despite their delicacy, the swallows depicted on the evening dress by Madeleine Vionnet are no less menacing. Hand embroidered with both matte and shiny sequins on a black silk tulle overdress, the raptors ominously encircle the body of the wearer. The dress formed part of Vionnet's autumn/winter 1938–39 collection, launched just one year before the outbreak of World War II. Against this backdrop, the menacing sensibility of the swallows is supplanted by an intense melancholia and sense of deathliness

BUTTERFLIES

"Literature and butterflies are the two sweetest passions known to man," novelist Vladimir Nabokov once professed.

Butterflies have fluttered onto the pages of poets through countless metaphors, but perhaps the most enduring and universal is transformation, stemming from their unique life cycle - from caterpillar to chrysalis to butterfly - which figuratively embodies life, death, and rebirth.
